Welcome to "The Grove" circa 1790. Originally built by Thomas Pierce II and named for the large orchard of White Oak trees that stood on the estate, which were sold to the Russian Navy in 1854 to build a fleet of ships to fight the Crimean War. The Grove is similar to the John Marshal House located at the University of Richmond and the Moses-Myers House in downtown Norfolk. It is believed that all three were built by the same architect about the same time.

Mr Pierce was a county Justice, a Captain of the militia from 1777-1782, and a member of the Virginia Convention of 1788.

The walls are made of colonial fired Flemish brick and are between 18 and 21 inches thick. This Georgian styled home has three Greek revival porches and features original heartwood pine floors, original doors, locks and wood bars. Over the years the home has been a hotel, boarding house, and at one time a private residence of former Lt. Governor A.E.S. "Gi" and Anna Delk Stephens. The Stephens restored the house to a private residence and added a kitchen wing in 1956 which was updated in 2015. The large foyer which extends the width of the home is accented by a stairwell in the west end that is open all the way to the third floor. The large square drawing room has one of five elegant fireplaces. Located In Historic Smithfield where you can walk to wonderful shops and restaurants.
